Program may extend printer's ink life and save money

June 25, 2002 Posted: 06:40:11 AM PDT

KNIGHT RIDDER NEWSPAPERS

It seems that disposable products expire just at the point we need them the most, not to mention their cost seems to increase every time we buy them.

Nowhere in the world of computing is that felt more than with our printers. Doesn't it seem like it was only yesterday you put in that brand new inkjet cartridge? Well, you might want to check out a new program that claims to extend the life of your printer's ink supply.

InkSaver lets you control the amount of ink used in printing a document. InkSaver's creator, Strydent Software claims that it optimizes the printer data so that the printer uses less ink while still printing at its highest resolution.

InkSaver's control panel gives you control over the black and color cartridges. Using a vertical slider, you can adjust the savings from 0 to 75 percent.

InkSaver works with most Hewlett-Packard, Epson and Canon color inkjet models and will work with any brand of ink cartridge or refill kit. The $34.99 you spend in InkSaver should pay for itself after the first time you need to replace a cartridge.

InkSaver's Web site (www.ink saver.com) offers an estimator that lets you input what you pay for inks, as well as how many you use in a year. It works for Windows 98 and up.
